We met with about ten of our western neighbors yesterday evening. The meeting was very positive, so that we could better understand their concerns and priorities, and also so that they had greater context for the information we have provided about the hotel, correcting some misconceptions.

One area we're exploring now is a wall on the westerly property line. We know that we can acoustically shield the sound of garbage trucks with a 15' tall wall that we studied with our acoustical engineer, which is taller than they would like to see – they've asked us to study an 8' wall as partial mitigation, with together with the time related restrictions we've discussed seems acceptable. We'll have the results of that investigation in our drawings Friday.
