a wide dormer-style opening with windows, to provide more room and natural light.

Two buildings were put up to the north of the garage/maid's quarters. They were a tool shed, 29, and a greenhouse, 30, probably part of the effort to maintain the grounds around the C.O.s quarters and the radio receiving building.

Officers. There were two 2-family quarters for officers. The building at 5, acquired with the 160-acre parcel, was remodeled for this purpose. The old Army officers' quarters at 23 retained its function for the Navy. For single or visiting officers and probably also C.P.O.'s, apartment quarters A thru F were built by the Navy.

Chief Petty Officers. For the information of those who do not know, the Navy's chief petty officer (C.P.O.) is the equivalent of the Army's master sergeant. The C.P.O., however, wears a distinctive uniform similar to a commissioned officer's but styled somewhat differently. For C.P.O.s with families, the Navy converted the officers' duplex at 22 into a 4-family C.P.O.s' quarters. In addition, the old noncommissioned officers' (master sergeants') quarters were designated as C.P.O.s' 2-family quarters.

Married Enlisted Men. Living quarters for married enlisted men were generally assigned on the basis of rank, with priority given to petty officers first class, followed by second class, etc. The single-family quarters, 8 thru 10, 18, and 28, were on the 160-acre parcel. They probably dated from Fort Ward days, when married soldiers not eligible for on-post housing rented them from private owners. In addition, the navy built some 2-family units, 13 thru 15, and 19 thru 21, to a standard plan. One of them is illustrated.
